SCOUTING
BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

Fellows, be seated.

I want you to meet our new artist. He's Tenderfoot Scout Jack Betts of Troop 17, and he's the Art Editor of this department of the Jersey Journal. You'll meet him here every Tuesday.

It's only natural that you'd want to get a view of the Scout who drew the three pictures that appear to-day. So I said: "Jack, old man Just draw a picture of yourself making your bow to the audience."

And this is what Jack drew:

But just between you and me, he doesn't look a bit like the drawing. That's just his way of having his little joke.

And in every Scout heart is the will to do what work he can for his country and his flag.

What is better still, every Scout in doing his bit. Starting last Saturday the Scouts of Jersey City have been selling War Saving Stamps and Thrift Stamps, working in conjunction with

And patted the neck all flecked with foam. "Our work is done," he said. "Old Man—"The nation's round to a War-Thrift Plan."

TROOP 29 IS NOW BUILDING BIRD HOUSES

The Scouts of Troop 29 are preparing for the return of the birds by building bird houses. No bird house can be nailed up outdoors until it has

FIRST AID FOR SCOUTS IN DISTRESS

The scene was a camp. I'm not going to tell you where. The Scoutmaster was busy a short distance away. Suddenly there came a shout.

"Help! Help!"

The Scoutmaster came flying back. If don't believe it look at Jack Rolls' drawing. "What's the matter?" he gasped.

"I've been trying to tie a diamond knot," said a very small Scout, "and I've tied my fingers in a knot instead."

Anyhow, that's how it was told to me.

Do you believe it?

We—that is, Jack Bells, the art editor, and I—sat down yesterday to plan this week's Scouting news.

"How shall we start it, Jack?" I asked.

"Well," said Jack, "last week you had a little fun with me showing them how I don't look; now it's my turn."

"What do you mean?" I asked, growing pale.

"I mean," Jack said in determination, "that this week we'll let them see how you look."

"But listen, Jack, old man—we can't do anything like that."

"We're going to," said Jack, and he reached for his pencil.

"Jack," I said, weakly, "have mercy!"

And this was Jack's idea of mercy:

F. Boehler, G. Pattscheck, Wm. C. Robinson.

Troop No. 17.—Louis Suter, Robert Hanson, Ambrose Featherston, Philip Shortt, Theodore Ayerson.

Troop No. 21.—Robert Beatus.

Troop No. 23.—George Walshe, Fred Schwacke.

Troop No. 36.—Norman Edwardson, Harold Coutlee, Raymond Vark.

Troop No. 37.—Clarence Finch, Walter Fredericks, John Mortagh.

shoes, hair, buttons on uniform, having manual at meetings promptness and behavior. James Browning, Harry G. Hudson, Paul Berlin, William Otto and Robert Bruggeman have joined the troop. On a recent hike Ray Vogt passed his second-class tests, and William Otto passed the tenderfoot tests.

THE BOOB SCOUT CHIPS IN TO THE FIRE AGAIN

The Scoutmaster entered troop headquarters leisurely. Suddenly his hair stood on end. One Scout was struggling on a bench and was blue in the face, and another Scout was apparently choking him to death.

"Hie!" the Scoutmaster shouted. "Stop it. What does this mean?"

FARMER AND THE SCOUT: SCOUT AND THE BUG.

Since I told you last week that Troop 17 was going to go farming, I've been hearing every day of Scouts who are going to go forth and tackle the pesky cut worm, and the cabbage worm, and the ferocious potato bug.

"What do you think of it, Jack?" I asked Jack Betts, our trusty cartoonist.

"Great stuff," said Jack.

"Can you draw a picture of a battle between a cut worm and a Scout?"

Jack said he could. He did. Here it it:

After that we know for a fact that a Scout is brave.
